

Conservation of Natural Resources

"Conservation of Natural Resources: A prerequisite to the achievement of peace and development". This statement means that the preservation and sustainable management of natural resources are essential for attaining both peace and development in our society.

By conserving the natural resources we will be able to reach our goal:

- Environmental stability
  - We can prevent damaging our environment and ensure the availability of clean air and water. It contributes to peace by reducing conflicts over scarce resources and minimizing the impact of natural disasters, especially ensuring the health of our community.
- Sustainable development
  - By utilizing resources responsibly, we can meet the needs of the present generation without worrying the future generations to meet their own needs.
- Interconnectedness
  - By recognizing the shared responsibility for resource conservation, countries can create partnerships and enhancing understanding and cooperation without any problem to maintain peace and achieving common development goals.
